COURSE DESCRIPTION:
Offers practical hands-on experience with forms and practices of technical and professional writing, including documentation, correspondence, audience analysis, writing for social media, evaluation, and review. Emphasizes clear, concise, and effective writing in information technology settings, both within organizations and for user services.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:
At the end of the course, the student will be able to:

1. Write clear and concise documents for a variety of uses in information technology settings.
2. Explain how to use IT services and software packages for both novice and advanced users in clear and easy-to-follow documentation.
3. Evaluate the effectiveness of both their own and others’ technical writing.
4. Rewrite materials effectively in response to the evaluation and criticism of others.
5. Assess and evaluate appropriate sources of information for use in information technology settings.

COURSE MATERIALS:
No required textbook. Other readings as assigned; these readings will typically be chosen and assigned in response to particular issues that arise in class, will include online technical resources, ranging from Wikipedia and other general-audience materials to more targeted information-technology related resources, and will provide examples of the types of writing covered during the semester. While specific readings will vary from semester to semester, examples of possible readings might include items such as the following:

- Purdue Owl, “Audience Analysis Overview.” https://owl.english.purdue.edu/owl/resource/629/1/
COURSE ASSIGNMENTS AND EVALUATION:

Note: All assignments require multiple drafts and revision for successful completion.

1. Audience Analysis
   In this assignment, you will be required to consider, in depth, the needs, levels of knowledge and expertise, background, interests, and practices of multiple stakeholder groups likely to be affected by a (fictional) as-yet undeveloped appropriate use policy for information technology for FSU’s College of Communication and Information. Your analysis of these stakeholder groups will be considered in the development of the policy, which will govern acceptable uses of IT resources, whether on campus or off-campus using College-owned equipment.

2. In-Class Scenario Writing Exercises
   Occasionally during the semester, unannounced in-class writing sessions will take place. During these sessions, a specific scenario will be provided, and you will be asked to quickly produce a document appropriate to that scenario (e.g., to provide a document providing options to an inexperienced user who wishes to buy a new computer). Most of these in-class sessions will involve small groups, but some may be individual work.

NOTE: although assignments 3, 4, and 5 refer to current (as of 2014) online settings and applications such as Facebook, Twitter, Wikis, and Blogs, these are intended only as examples of online contexts in which IT writing may be done. As new settings and applications emerge over time, details of these assignments will change as appropriate to take advantage of and explore the capabilities of these new settings.

3. Writing For Social Media 1: Weekly Facebook and Twitter Posts
   In this assignment, you will choose a technical issue of current interest to follow in the media throughout the semester; submit your choice to the instructor no later than the first class session of Week Two. Beginning early in the semester, and continuing through the rest of the semester, each week you will post items related to your topic to the following three Social Media sites:
   - The Course Twitter Feed
   - The Course Facebook Page
   - The Course Blog

4. Writing For Social Media 2: Developing Collaborative Online Resources: Formal Proposal (group assignment) Each group will develop and manage a Wiki page related to an IT or other technical issue; your group will choose the topic for your Wiki in consultation with the instructor. Early in the semester, your group must make an informal presentation of your proposal to the class, present a draft version of the proposal for peer review, and submit a finalized formal proposal that both summarizes the proposed content of the Wiki page you wish to create, and outlines policies for a variety of administrative and procedural issues related to the creation and maintenance of that Wiki page.

5. Writing For Social Media 3: Developing Wiki Resources: Final Project and Report (group assignment)
   Each group will develop and manage a Wiki page related to an IT or other technical issue; your group will choose the topic for your Wiki in consultation with the instructor. The final version of each group’s Wiki will be due at the end of the semester. Each Wiki must (to the extent possible) meet the standards and requirements as specified in the final, fully reviewed, proposal, and must include documentation of how those standards have been met (or, if they have not been met, must include documentation of why they have not, and what has been done instead).

6. Documentation 1: User Guides for Novice Users

7. Documentation 2: User Guides for Advanced Users
   In these assignments, you will create documentation for users – both novice and advanced – of some aspect of either a social media venue or other online technology (e.g., a browser). The details of your documentation will vary, depending on which venue or technology you choose, but you will write one Users’ Guide for novice users focusing on a single introductory aspect of your technology and a second Users’ Guide for advanced users focusing on a more complex aspect of the same technology.

8. Developing and Drafting Policy Statements for Appropriate ICT Use
   In this assignment, you will create a policy statement for a growing IT business formally defining and establishing an acceptable use policy for a range of face-to-face, digital, and print genres to be used by employees and management for internal business communications.

9. Evaluation and Peer Reviews (throughout semester)
   For each assignment, you will both submit your work for review and critique from your peers in the class and will review and critique the work of others. These peer review sessions will take place during class with input from the instructor.

10. Annotated Bibliography of Sources used in Other Assignments (throughout semester)
    For each assignment, you will submit an accompanying annotated bibliography of all sources consulted or used in completing the assignment.
